

A TEN-MINUTE CHEATSHEET

Career Clarity Compass

A focused way to separate outside expectations from the work that actually fits you.

REFLECTION EXERCISE DR. GARGEE GADGIL

A CLEARER VIEW

Look for the pattern,
not one perfect answer.

Energy

What kind of work leaves you engaged rather than emptied?

Strength

What do people trust you to notice, make, explain, or solve?

Meaning

Whose life or work do you want your effort to improve?

Reality

What constraints and responsibilities need an honest place in the plan?

Circle one phrase from each box. Where they overlap, you may find a direction worth exploring.

MOVE WITHOUT OVERCOMMITTING

Choose one small way to gather evidence.

You do not need to decide your whole future. Choose an experiment that teaches you something real.

- ☐ Have one honest conversation with someone doing the work.
- ☐ Try a one-hour beginner lesson, tutorial, or practice project.
- ☐ Notice a task you already do well and name the skill underneath it.
- ☐ Rewrite one role description around contribution, not status.
- ☐ Make a “not for me” list to clarify your boundaries.

My next experiment is...

Keep it specific enough to complete within seven days.

I will know more when...

What signal, feeling, feedback, or result will you pay attention to?
