

A FIVE-MINUTE GROUNDING PRACTICE

The Gentle Reset

A small pause for the moments when everything feels a little too loud.

REFLECTION GUIDE DR. GARGEE GADGIL

BEFORE YOU BEGIN

You do not need to solve everything right now.

This practice is simply a way to come back into the room, back into your body, and back to the one next thing you can choose.

1

Make a little room

Put both feet on the floor if that is comfortable. Let your hands rest. You do not need perfect silence—only a willingness to pause.

2

Lengthen the exhale

Breathe in gently. Let your next breath out be a little slower. Repeat three times without forcing the breath.

3

Name what is here

Quietly notice: “Right now, I feel...” There is no need to judge, explain, or change what you find.

A MOMENT OF HONESTY

Let the noise settle onto the page.

What feels heaviest right now?

Name the thought, task, or feeling asking for the most attention.

What is actually mine to carry today?

Separate what needs you now from what can wait—or belongs to someone else.

What would “gentle enough” look like?

Choose the smallest caring action available to you.

YOUR TINY INTENTION

For the next few hours,
I will choose _____.

Perhaps: one thing at a time, a glass of water, a clear boundary, a softer voice, or five minutes outside.

“A reset does not erase the day.
It changes how you meet it.”

Return to this guide whenever you need a small way back to yourself.